Brand New Book. Excerpt from Observations on the Remitting Fever, Which Prevailed in the City of Albany, in the Summer and Autumn of 1809 The last winter was remarkably cold and severe. The spring was also cold and dry. Vegetation did not come forward as early as usual. Very little rain fell from the breaking up of winter, until about the loth of July; at which time it began to rain, and continued without much intermission, for about four teen days. At the same time the weather was so cold, that warm clothing and good fires were almost as comfortable as in winter. This continuance of rain, caused the Hud son s river to over?ow its banks, and do much damage in the low lands to grass, grain, c. In this place, the docks were covered, the cellars in the lower part of the city filled with water, and all low places inundated: many of which could not be drained; and the water was left to stagnate and to be exposed...
