The extended use of these tests has, however, also served to show the increasing need for tests of special intelligence, particularly in connection with vocational guidance. Besides knowing a pupil s relative ability in general abstract intelligence, it is of great importance to discover also in what other traits or abilities he is strong or weak. The tests herein described have been found effective in detecting one such ability; namely, general mechanical aptitude. They have been shown to reveal very great differences among school children, some pupils possessing many times as much of this ability as others. Individual Differences In Mechanical Aptitude And Information In a public school in Manhattan, New York City, out of over 2000 pupils who were given these tests, the scores ranged from 13 per cent right up to nearly 90 per cent right.
