Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO reviewed certain allegations concerning the General Services Administrations (GSA) operation of the indoor firing range located in the Cincinnati Post Office and Courthouse Building. A constituent had accused GSA of allowing the facility to remain open although it was a health and safety hazard. GSA had temporarily closed the range for interim modifications in 1977 because tests showed that airborne lead contaminants exceeded safe levels. The range was reopened in a month, although tests continued to show a high level of contaminants. GAO found that GSA erroneously told the constituent that the range had been permanently closed after the initial tests. As a result of the revelation, GSA initiated an internal investigation to determine management responsibility for actions taken relating to the firing range. This item ships from La Vergne, TN.
